(Dreface.

The object of the two volumes which form the present work is to supply the student of Assyrian Demonology with English transliterations and translations, with the necessary notes, etc., of the documents printed in the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Parts of Cuneiform Texts from Babylonian Tablets, etc., which have been recently issued by the Trustees of the British Museum. An examination of these two Parts will show that they contain copies of all the Tablets belonging to the Series Utukri Limnûti, Ašakki Marṣûtı, and Ṭr’ı, i.e., "Evil Spirits," "Fever Sickness," and "Headache," which have now been identified, together with the texts of a considerable number of compositions of a similar character.

These collections of Evil Spirit Texts form large and important sections of the native literature concerning Babylonian and Assyrian Demonology, and there is reason to believe that the material now published represents about one-half of that belonging to the three Series mentioned above which was known to the scribes of Ašsurbanipal. Of the condition of the archetypes in pre-Babylonian times we have no information whatever, but there is no reason to doubt that the versions which were adopted as standard texts in the reign of Aššurbanipal represented substantially the readings of the primitive documents. We are, in short, justified in assuming that we have in our hands at the present time tolerably accurate copies of the exorcisms and spells which the Sumerian and his Babylonian successor employed, some six or seven thousand years ago, to avert the attacks of devils, and to ward off malign influences of every kind.

The first to make known to the world the character of the Evil Spirit Texts was the late General H. C. Rawlinson, Bart., G.C.B., who published in the Fourth Volume of the Cuneiform Inscriptions of Western Asia, London, 1875, as much of the text of the Fifth and Sixteenth Tablets as had then been identified. During the period of the preparation of the seventy plates which form the Fourth Volume printed copies of many of them were supplied to M. François Lenormant, and to various other scholars, and M. Lenormant issued some months before the appearance of the British Museum publication his La Magie chez les Chaldéennes et les Origines Accadiennes, in which he gave renderings of several of the texts relating to Evil Spirits. In the year 1887 Professor Sayce, in his Hibbert Lectures, gave English translations of the greater number of the texts with which M. Lenormant had already dealt, as well as of others. The translations, however, of both these scholars were necessarily incomplete, for the simple reason that only a portion of the available material had been published by the late Sir Henry Rawlinson, who made no pretence of publishing in his immortal Corpus of cuneiform texts more than specimens of the various classes of literature which were known to the Babylonians and Assyrians. Subsequently several of the texts of this class have been studied and referred to in the publications of various Assyriologists, but the present work represents the first attempt which has been made to deal with any of the groups of the Evil Spirit Texts as a whole, and of course no connected translations of them have before appeared.

In this and the following volume of Messrs. Luzac's "Semitic Text and Translation Series " transliterations and translations of about two hundred and forty tablets and fragments belonging to various collections in the British Museum are given, and it is believed that about one hundred and sixty of these are published in Cuneiform Texts from Babylonian Tablets, etc., Parts XVI and XVII, for the first time. The present publication is intended to do for the "Evil Spirit" Series, and the Series relating to Fevers and Headaches, what Professor Zimmern has done for the Shurp $\hat{u}$ Series, and Professor Tallqvist for the Makl $\hat{u}$ Series.

The reader's attention is called to the fact that where it has been impossible to assign to Tablets their correct position in their Series, they have been indicated by the letters "A," "B," "C," etc. In translating the texts the renderings into English have been made as literal as possible, and wherever possible the Assyrian word has been translated by the same English equivalent.

The material given in the following pages will be found to afford abundant proof of the fact that a considerable proportion of the magical practices which are in use in the East to the present day were well known to the inhabitants of Mesopotamia several thousands of years ago, and that many of them were borrowed by the Hebrews and other dwellers in Syria and Persia from their neighbours on the Tigris and Euphrates.

As was to be expected, a number of misconceptions have arisen during the last few years as to the purport of certain magical texts, and as an example of this may be specially mentioned the views which have been promulgated concerning Tablet "K," (11. 183 ff .), for it has been confidently asserted that this document contains an allusion to the Biblical Garden of Eden. The text of this tablet mentions a place called Eridu, and a plant or tree named kiškanû, of dense growth and shining appearance, which grew beside the abyss, i.e. the Ocean or Sea; the place where the plant grew was said to be the couch of a god. Immediately following these statements is a reference to Shamash and Tammuz, who are said to dwell "in its interior," and mention is next made of the "mouths of the rivers." Such are the statements of the tablet, but, basing their opinion on certain interpretations of the above text, some Assyriologists have asserted that the Babylonian Garden of Eden was in the immediate vicinity of Eridu, and they have identified the tree or plant with the Tree of the Knowledge of Good and Evil, which was believed to grow in the Hebrew Paradise. Quite recently, however, the missing portion of this text has been identified, and it is now clear that the text is an incantation and nothing more. This document, the opening lines of which have been so strangely misunderstood, indicated to the magician, who was about to treat his afflicted patient, that a certain kind of plant or tree, the original of which, according to tradition, grew in Eridu, and afforded a dwelling to Shamash and Tammuz, contained magical properties ; and acting on this information the magician was directed to make use of a portion of the kiškanû plant or tree on behalf of the said patient. The text actually states that the gods themselves made use of this plant to work a miracle of healing, and the implication is that as the kiškan $\hat{u}$ plant was on this occasion of great benefit, it may again be made to perform the healing of a sufferer, always provided that suitable Words of Power were recited by a duly qualified person, and appropriate ceremonies were performed, before the plant itself was used as a remedy. Thus there is no reason for believing that the text of Tablet " K " contains any allusion to the Garden of Eden, or that the plant kis̈kanû is anything more than a herb or shrub which was used in working magic. Further, the identification of the kiskan $\hat{u}$ plant with the "vine" has nothing to rest upon, and still less does it in any way represent the Babylonian equivalent of the Tree of Life. "The mouths of the rivers" have nothing to do with the four rivers of the Hebrew Paradise, and the new fragment leaves no room for doubt that the line in which they are mentioned merely explains the locality from which the gods obtained the plant, namely, from the confluence of two streams or rivers.

To Mr. L. W. King I owe many thanks for his friendly help in this work, and especially his assistance in reading doubtful signs on the clay tablets.

In conclusion, my thanks are due to Dr. E. A. Wallis Budge for much kind help, and for his numerous suggestions in such parts of the volume as deal with comparative magic.

Infroduction.

Jnfroduction.

From the earliest times Eastern races, in common with the rest of mankind, have always held a firm belief in the existence of evil spirits, ghosts, and all kindred powers. The phenomena of death, the mystery of disease and sickness, and all the other events of common occurrence in daily life gave rise to speculations about the unseen world, which gradually led to a distinction, although slight at all times, between good and evil spirits. The early Semitic people of Babylonia, whoever they may have been or wherever they may have migrated from, found a theology ready to their hands in their adopted country, which they took over from its primitive inhabitants the Sumerians, doubtless grafting to it many of the beliefs of their forefathers. To the latest times, down to a century or two before the Christian era, they retained the doctrines in their original language, making interlinear translations of them for use in the temples and among the doctors, and it is owing to this that we can speak with tolerable certainty on many points of the early religion of Babylonia.

There is little comparatively that shows traces of original Semitic composition in the books and documents relating to spirits, for by far the greater part of the enormous mass of material of this class is written in the Sumerian language, either with or without a Babylonian or Assyrian translation, and the numerous Sumerian words for the various forms of spirits and demons were either incorporated bodily in the newcomers' language, with, of course, the necessary phonetic changes, or were translated either exactly or paraphrastically. Indeed, it is a remarkable thing that that portion of the Semitic stock which entered Babylonia, although receptive on all points, I/seems to have been very limited in original ideas regarding the ghost world ; and this is not unnatural, since at that early period the Semite can hardly have been much more than a nomad possessing only the beginnings of a civilization. He recognized "gods" (singular, ILU; plural, ILÂNI ${ }^{1}$ ) in common with the rest of his stock; he seems to have had some idea that the soul or eximmu, literally "the thing which is snatched away," ${ }^{2}$ possessed supernatural powers, or at least an existence ; but beyond this it is exceedingly difficult to say how much of his later psychology and eschatology was original, and how much was borrowed. This much seems certain,

[^0]however, that words like utukku "spirit," alû "demon," lilû some form of ghost with feminine counterparts lilîtu and ardat lilî, and probably gallû "devil," were all borrowed from the Sumerians, and the names of two others, rabiṣu "lurker" and aHyazu "seizer," are probably free renderings of Sumerian words for which the Babylonian had no exact equivalents. All these words occur in set phrases constantly in the incantations, and of the other names for spirits we find the following list: ilu, ekimmu, Šêdu, labartu, labaṣu, and lamassu; of these the first two have already been explained, but of the linguistic origin of the remainder very little is known. Indeed, among the other Semitic tribes, with the exception of the Arabs, the comparative paucity of words signifying demons is very marked, and most of the few which they employ are borrowed directly from Babylonia, the Hebrews using שיׁארִים (i.e., šÊdu) and יִי? לית (i.e., lilîtu), and in Rabbinic times שאדין and לימין (i.e., Lilû). רוח, which is another word used by the Rabbis to mean "spirit," is the ordinary word in Hebrew for this, and corresponds to ekimmu.

It is therefore evident that when the Semitic Babylonian took over the learning of his Sumerian predecessors, he seems also to have unconsciously adapted and enlarged his ideas to fit their beliefs, receiving their doctrines in their entirety as worthy of implicit trust, and in the belief that his teachers must necessarily understand the supernatural powers peculiar to their own country.
(i) The various Classes of Evil Spirits.

The primitive Sumerian recognized three distinct classes of evil spirit, all ready to torment the hapless wanderer. ${ }^{1}$ First came the disembodied human soul which could find no rest, and so wandered up and down the face of the earth ; secondly, the gruesome spirits which were half human and half demon ; and thirdly, the fiends and devils who were of the same nature as the gods, who rode on the noxious winds, or brought storms and pestilence. Each of these three kinds was divided up into classes according to the several characteristics of the evil spirits which composed them, and the six chief of these are enumerated in the constantly recurring line utukiu limnu alû limnu ekimmu limnu gallû limnu ilu limnu rabiṣu limnu, "Evil Spirit, evil Demon, evil Ghost, evil Devil, evil God, evil Fiend," but this by no means includes all the powers of evil, for this list is frequently amplified by the additions labartu labaṣu ahyazu lilû lilîtu ardat lilî, all various forms of malignant spirits.

The first evil spirit, utukku, was originally a spirit, spectre, or ghost, since it is once at least used of the

[^1]spectre of a dead man raised from the Underworld. This form of magic-necromancy-was a favourite method employed for looking into the future in the East in ancient times, and a remarkable instance of it occurs in the Epic of Gilgamish. The story runs that the hero Gilgamish appeals to the god Nergal to restore his friend Ea-bani to him, and his prayer is answered, for the god opens the earth and the Utukru of Ea-bani rises up " like the wind," that is, probably a transparent spectre in the human shape of Ea-bani, who converses with Gilgamish. ${ }^{1}$ The same ideas and beliefs were current among the Hebrews, for when Saul goes to visit the "woman with a familiar spirit" at En-dor she brings up Samuel out of the earth, and he answers the questions which Saul wishes to ask. ${ }^{2}$ Among the Assyrians "Raiser of the Departed Spirit" ${ }^{3}$ was a recognized title of the sorcerer, and from this and the story in the Gilgamish Epic it is evident that such practices as necromancy were not uncommon. How far the utukru differed from the ekimmu (which is the proper word for a departed spirit) is difficult to say ; it was a ghost or spectre that either lurked in the desert lying in wait for man, ${ }^{4}$ or it might have its home

[^2]in the mountains, sea, or graveyard, ${ }^{1}$ and evil would befall him on whom it merely cast its eye. ${ }^{2}$

The second of the six, the alû, is a demon that hides itself in dark corners and caverns in the rock, haunting ruins and deserted buildings and slinking through the streets at night like a pariah dog. It lies in wait for the unwary, ready to rush out from its hiding-place to "envelop him as with a garment," or, coming into the bedchamber by night, it steals sleep away from weary mortals by standing over their beds and threatening to pounce upon them should they dare to close their eyes. ${ }^{3}$ It is a horrible apparition, at times without mouth, limbs, or ears, a half-human, half-devilish creation borne probably by the ghoulish lilîtu or ardat lilî to some man to whom she has attached herself. ${ }^{4}$ This latter tradition remained current long after Babylon had fallen, and it reappears in the Rabbinic stories which relate how Lilith bore to Adam demons and spirits. ${ }^{5}$ The Rabbis were of opinion that a man might have children by allying himself with a demon, ${ }^{6}$ and although they would naturally not be visible to human beings, yet when that man

[^3]was dying they would hover round his bed, and after his death would hail him as their father. ${ }^{1}$ 'There seems to be an allusion to this monstrous connection in the following extract from an Assyrian hymn to the Sun god :- ${ }^{2}$
"He on whom an evil Spirit hath rushed,
"He whom an evil Demon hath enveloped in his bed,
"He whom an evil Ghost hath cast down in the night,
"He whom a great Devil hath smitten,
"He whose limbs an evil God hath racked (?),
" He-the hair of whose body an evil Fiend hath set on end, ${ }^{3}$
"He whom . . . [a Hag-demon] hath seized,
"He whom [a Ghoul] hath cast down,
" He whom a Robber-sprite hath afflicted,
" He whom the Handmaid ${ }^{4}$ of the Night-Phantom hath wedded,
"The man ${ }^{4}$ with whom the Handmaid of the Night-Phantom hath had union ${ }^{5}$."
The third is the ekimmu or Departed Spirit, the soul of the dead person which for some reason

[^4]cannot rest, and wanders as a spectre over the earth. After death, the souls of men and women who died in the ordinary course of nature entered into the Underworld, "the House of Darkness, the seat of the god Irkalla, the House from which none that enter come forth again," where they remained trying to eke out a wretched existence by feeding on dust and mud, and receiving the offerings and libations paid to them by their descendants and relations on earth. If for any reason these attentions should cease, and the spirit of the dead man be forgotten, then it was forced by hunger and thirst to come forth from its abode in Hades to seek on earth the food and water which no longer filtered through to satisfy its wants, and, roaming up and down, it sought what it might devour. If it found a luckless man who had wandered far from his fellows into haunted places, ${ }^{1}$ it fastened upon him, plaguing and tormenting him until such time as a priest should drive it away with exorcisms. This is expressly stated on a tablet of this class which runs:-
" The gods which seize (upon man)
Have come forth from the grave ;
" The evil wind-gusts
Have come forth from the grave ;

[^5]" To demand the payment of rites and the pouring out of libations,
They have come forth from the grave ;
" All that is evil in their hosts, like a whirlwind Hath come forth from the grave." ${ }^{1}$

Or again :-
" The evil Spirit, the evil Demon, the evil Ghost, the evil Devil,
" From the earth have come forth;
"From the Underworld unto the land they have come forth ;
" In heaven they are unknown,
" On earth they are not understood,
" They neither stand nor sit,
" Nor eat nor drink." ${ }^{2}$
In making offerings to the dead lies the base of the principle of ancestor-worship; the descendants give food and drink to the manes of their forefathers that they may not need to return to earth to demand from the living the care and attention that is their due. Even in the enlightened period of the later Assyrian empire, about в.c. 650 , this belief was prevalent among the [^6]highest in the land, for we find Aššurbanipal desecrating the ancient tombs of the Kings of Elam and carrying away their bones and causing the rites paid to them to cease, so that their spirits might have no rest. ${ }^{1}$ In the Epic of Gilgamish, when the wraith of Ea-bani has been raised from the dead by Nergal, it describes the Underworld :- ${ }^{2}$

" The man whose corpse lieth in the desert-
" Thou and I have oft seen such an one-
" His spirit resteth not in the earth ;
" The man whose spirit hath none to care for it-
" Thou and I have oft seen such an one-
" The dregs of the vessel, the leavings of the feast,
" And that which is cast out into the street are his food."
But under certain circumstances the soul of a dead man never entered the Underworld, as is clear from the poem quoted above. The ekimmu-spirit of an unburied corpse could find no rest and remained prowling about the earth so long as its body was above ground. In the Fourth Tablet of the Series "Evil Spirits" various disembodied ghosts are exorcised and addressed individually :- ${ }^{3}$
" Whether thou art a ghost unburied,
" Or a ghost that none careth for,
" Or a ghost with none to make offerings to it."

[^7]"Or a ghost that hath none to pour libations to it,
"Or a ghost that hath no posterity."
This last line shows that the duty of making oblations to the dead devolved, as was natural, on the eldest son and direct descendants, and this is one of the reasons for the overwhelming desire of the Semite for children to perpetuate the family name. There are other instances in which souls which cannot obtain rest are mentioned, e.g. :-
" He that lieth in a ditch
" He that no grave covereth
" He that lieth uncovered,
"Whose head is uncovered with dust,
" The king's son that lieth in the desert,
" Or in the ruins,
"The hero whom they have slain with the sword." ${ }^{1}$
But in addition to the ghosts of the unburied or uncared-for dead, the souls of men and women who died violent or unnatural deaths or who departed this life before fulfilling or completing certain duties could obtain no rest, and were compelled to remain as disembodied spirits to haunt mankind, until they were laid to rest by exorcism. Among these may be mentioned the following :-
"He that hath died of hunger in prison,
"He that hath died of thirst in prison,

[^8]" The hungry man who in his hunger hath not smelt the smell of food,
" He whom the bank of a river hath made to perish,
"He that hath died in the desert or marshes,
" He that a storm hath overwhelmed in the desert,
" The Night-wraith that hath no husband,
" The Night-fiend ${ }^{1}$ that hath no wife,
" He that hath posterity ${ }^{1}$ and he that hath none." ${ }^{2}$
Many of these ghosts are merely elaborations of the preceding class, being the souls of those who were lost or forgotten. The " Night-wraith that hath no husband," who has the same characteristics as the Lilith of Rabbinic tradition, will be referred to again later on. The words "He that hath no posterity" of course refer to the man who has no descendants to pay him due rites.

Other ghosts are the women who die in childbirth or while nursing their babes. The idea is that they will return in some form to seek their child. ${ }^{3}$

[^9]This is a common form of ghost in Oriental countries. Doughty relates ${ }^{1}$ how in Arabia he " heard scritching owls sometimes in the night ; then " the nomad wives and children answered them with " mocking again, Ymgebâs! Ymgebâs! The hareem " said, It is a wailful woman, seeking her lost child " through the wilderness, which was turned into this " forlorn bird." Among the Malays, if a woman dies in childbirth, she is supposed to become a langsuyar or flying demon, a female familiar. To prevent this glass beads are put in the mouth of the corpse, a hen's egg is put under the armpits, and needles in the palms of the hands. This stops the dead woman shrieking, waving her arms, or opening her hands. ${ }^{2}$ The original Langsuyar was supposed to be a kind of night owl, ${ }^{3}$ like the Lilith of Rabbinic tradition, ${ }^{4}$ and is similar therefore to the ghost of which Doughty speaks. In India the ghost of a woman who dies in childbed is a very terrible demon indeed. ${ }^{5}$

The souls of the devoted temple-women who die of disease, and of men or maidens who have reached a marriageable age and yet die unmarried, are also included in the category of ghosts. ${ }^{6}$

[^10]If an ekimmu which could find no rest came back to earth he might fasten himself on anyone who had been in some way connected with him in this world. The chance sharing of food, oil, or clothes during life constituted an act which gave the spirit after death a claim to return to its friend or even casual acquaintance to demand the rites which would give it peace. Even the mere act of eating, drinking, or anointing or dressing oneself in company with another person without receiving or giving anything was enough. Such ghosts are denounced individually in three paragraphs of four lines each at the end of a long incantation where all possible kinds of spectres are exorcised :-
" Whether thou be one with whom on a day I have eaten,
" Or with whom on a day I have drunk,
" Or with whom on a day I have anointed myself,
" Or with whom on a day I have put on apparel." The other paragraphs are similar-"Whether thou be one with whom I have entered and eaten," and " whether thou be one with whom I have eaten food when I was hungry," and so on. ${ }^{1}$ Moreover, if a man only looked upon a corpse he rendered himself liable to be attacked by the departed spirit. ${ }^{2}$

[^11]The belief in the eximmu-spirit had obtained such a hold over the Assyrians, that they even went the length of deducing omens from the appearance of such a ghost in a house. As a rule it was held to be an evil omen, whether it was merely a silent apparition or whether it gibbered or uttered some worls and awaited some response; it foretold certainly the destruction of the house, and in the latter case the owner of the house would die in addition. The same omen-text ${ }^{1}$ bears witness to the prevalence of the universal belief in apparitions which come during the night to the bedside where the man lies, and describes their actions over or under the bed.

The threat that is held over the heads of all spectres of this class is that no rites shall be paid to them until they have departed. Whether they are to be rewarded with their due after they have left the possessed man is not stated.

The fourth spirit is the gallû, a devil which perhaps sometimes assumes the form of a bull, since it is once described as "the gallî, the headstrong bull, the great ghost." ${ }^{2}$ Like the alit it prowls about the streets of the city, and apparently it is neither male nor female ; ${ }^{3}$ in fact, it is sexless. The word is used in classical Assyrian as a term of abuse, for we find Sennacherib describing the hostile Babylonians as gallû limnûti, "evil devils." ${ }^{4}$

[^12]The fifth supernatural being is ilu limnu, or "evil god," presumably a more general term, for it is left indefinite, and there are few, if any, descriptions of it like the other spirits.

The sixth spirit, the rabiṣu, as its name implies, is a lurking demon which, as the text quoted above shows, ${ }^{1}$ sets the hair of the body on end, but little is known of its other characteristics.

Of the three next, the labartu, labaṣu, and ahyazu, the labartu has a whole series of texts written against her. It is a female demon, the daughter of Anu, the trusted and accepted of Irnina, and she makes her home in the mountains, or cane-brakes of the marshes. Especially were children exposed to her attacks, and in the Series called by her name, which gives directions for driving her away, there are special ceremonies to be performed in connection with certain mystic words which are to be written on a stone and hung round the neck of a child. ${ }^{2}$

The Ahbazu or "Seizer" was a demon of some kind, but we know nothing of its attributes, and the same may be said of the labaṣu, which is here translated "ghoul"; the meaning, however, is quite uncertain.

Another triad of demons bore the interesting names of lilû, lilîtu, and ardat lilî. The second is [^13]obviously the feminine counterpart of the first, but it is difficult to discriminate between lilitu and the third, ardat lilî. Lilîtu is undoubtedly the word from which the Hebrew Lilith was borrowed, which occurs in Isaiah, xxxiv, 14, "The wild beasts of the desert shall also meet with the wild beasts of the island, and the satyr shall cry to his fellow ; the screech owl (רילית) also shall rest there, and find for herself a place of rest." The Rabbinic literature also is full of legends of her doings. According to tradition she bore to Adam devils, spirits, and lîlin (i.e. the same word as the Assyrian lilû). ${ }^{1}$ But although there is no doubt that the lilitu was a night spirit, it is improbable that the Lilith should have any real connection with the Hebrew laîlah, "night." The Rabbis naturally assumed that there was such a connection, and on the face of it such a comparison was plausible; but the evidence of the Assyrian word lilû shows that we can no longer accept what would otherwise be a reasonable derivation. If we are to find a Semitic derivation for it at all, and if it has not been taken over from the Sumerian, which seems most probable, it may be connected with lal̂, "to be abundant," lal̂̂, "luxuriousness." and lulî, " lasciviousness, wantonness." ${ }^{2}$

The ardat lilî differs from the lilîtu in that her

[^14]relations with human beings are much closer, and she thus takes over the functions of the Hebrew Lilith. The word ardatu, as has been explained above, always implies a marriageable woman, and this use bears further testimony to this. In one of the magical texts the sick man is described as one whom the ardat lilî has wedded. ${ }^{1}$ In the explanatory text K. I $56,{ }^{2}$ mention is made of the ardat lilî "that has no husband," a restless ghost that wanders up and down, forced by her desire to roam abroad, unable to rest quietly until she is satisfied. She therefore appears to have been the spirit of a woman, such as that which came to tempt St. Antony, and it is probably she who gives birth to the alû or devil half-human, half-spectre, while the lilîtu, although the female counterpart of the Lilû, was less human in its characteristics.

These were the principal spirits, but they formed only a single class of the powers of evil which might attack man. Witchcraft, sorcery, the Evil Eye, which cast a baneful glance, the Evil Tongue, which let fall a minatory word, and the evil man, were all foes which the exorcist had to meet. The Evil Eye is a very real terror to the Oriental, and it is even personified as a demon in a Syriac charm:-"The Evil Eye went forth from the stone of the rock,

[^15]and the angel Gabriel met her." ${ }^{1}$ There is a similar text in Assyrian about it :-
> " It hath looked on the traveller,
> " And like wood cut for poles
> "It hath bent his neck.
> " Ea hath seen this man and > " Hath placed food at his head,
> " Hath brought food for his body,
> "Hath shown favour for his life." ${ }^{2}$

The "evil man " may possibly have an echo in the old Rabbinic tradition, that the souls of the wicked when they die are the devils which are in this world. ${ }^{3}$

The Underworld Ekurra, the dwelling of the god Bel, was the abode of demons, whence they went forth to seize upon men. ${ }^{4}$ This was a tradition which descended to the Arabs concerning the Jinn, of which half are malignant and half good demons, and they inhabit the seven stages which form the edifice of the Underworld ${ }^{5}$ in passing it is worth noting that the Arabic for a madman is majninn, or one possessed by Jinn. The Babylonian devils also dwelt in Eridu as the servants of Ea and Damkina, ready to pounce on the hapless "wanderer." ${ }^{6}$ The lonely mountains, too,

[^16]were the home of many spectres, and from a recently identified text we learn that :-
" Headache hath come forth from the Underworld,
" It hath come forth from the Dwelling of Bel,
" From amid the mountains it hath descended upon the land,
" From the ends of the mountains it hath descended upon the land,
" From the fields not to return it hath descended,
" With the mountain-goat unto the fold it hath descended,
" With the ibex unto the Open-horned flocks it hath descended,
"With the Open-horned unto the Big-horned it hath descended." ${ }^{1}$

There is certainly an echo of this in the Syriac magic lore, in one of the charms against lunacy which ends :- . . . "[O Evil Spirit of Lunacy,] you " will needs go forth from the bones, from the sinews, " from the flesh, from the skin, and from the hair unto " the ground, and from the ground (passing) to iron, " and from iron to stone, and from stone (you will "pass on) to the mountain. This writing must be " sealed. Amen! Amen!" ${ }^{2}$

The deserts and ruins were also favourite haunts of [^17]ghosts and goblins. ${ }^{1}$ The ghoul of the Arabs dwells in the desert and appears to travellers in a friendly guise in order to make them lose their way, ${ }^{2}$ and in the same way in the Assyrian belief it is the traveller who is most liable to attacks.

The occupation of ruins by spectres is a universal superstition, and one to be explained by the belief that the spirit prefers a house if it can obtain it, and that it selects a deserted habitation because there are no longer in it any amulets or charms, or tutelary gods to keep it out. An inhabited house they may attack and force a way in temporarily, but on their presence there becoming known, the owner will at once take steps to render it untenable by them and drive them forth with the help of the exorcist. For this reason also the desert and inaccessible mountains, as affording dwellings far remote from mankind, were assigned as the probable locality for all malignant powers. A Syriac story of the ninth century testifies to this belief concerning ruins, for we read: "And while " a certain man was passing at night along the road " by the side of a fire temple of the Magians which " had been a ruin for some time, devils sprang out " upon him in the form of black ravens, and they "entered into him and convulsed him." ${ }^{3}$ In an

[^18]Ethiopic magical prayer written for 'Ahita Mîkâêl the same belief appears, for it prescribes certain glorious names, probably to be recited, "at the front and at the " doors if thou wouldst enter into a house which is old " or in ruins or unclean." ${ }^{1}$

In the New Testament the Saviour goes into the wilderness and there meets the devil. ${ }^{2}$

(2) The Seven Evil Spirits.

There are certain spirits described as "the Seven" around whom a great many poems were composed and welded into the incantations and spells. The best known is the Invocation against the Seven :-
"Seven are they! Seven are they!
" In the Ocean Deep seven are they!
" Battening in Heaven seven are they,
" Bred in the depths of Ocean.
" Nor male nor female are they,
" But are as the roaming windblast,
" No wife have they, no son can they beget ;
" Knowing neither mercy nor pity,
" They hearken not to prayer or supplication.
"They are as horses reared among the hills . . ." ${ }^{3}$
" Of these seven [the first] is the South Wind . . .
" The second is a dragon with mouth agape
" That none can [withstand];

[^19]" The third is a grim leopard
" That carrieth off children
" The fourth is a terrible serpent
" The fifth is a furious beast (?)
" After which no restraint
" The sixth is a rampant
" Which against god and king
" The seventh is an evil windstorm
" Which
"These seven are the Messengers of Anu, the king,
" Bearing gloom from city to city,
" Tempests that furiously scour the heavens,
" Dense clouds that over the sky bring gloom,
" Rushing windgusts, casting darkness o'er the brightest day,
" Forcing their way with baneful windstorms.
" Mighty destroyers, the deluge of the Storm-God, "Stalking at the right hand of the Storm-God." ${ }^{1}$
These Seven Spirits constantly reappear in various shapes and forms in the legends of other Semitic nations. The old Palestinian tradition of the Unclean Spirit undoubtedly owes something of its origin to them :-" The unclean spirit, when he is gone out of " the man, passeth through waterless places, seeking " rest ; and finding none, he saith, I will turn back " unto my house whence I came out. And when he " is come, he findeth it swept and garnished. Then " goeth he and taketh to him seven other spirits more " evil than himself . . ." But a still more striking evidence of the conservatism of Eastern tradition is shown in a Syriac charm which is worth quoting in full.

" [For] the fold of cattle.

"'Seven accursed brothers, accursed sons! de"'structive ones, sons of men of destruction! Why "' do you creep along on your knees and move upon "' your hands?' And they replied, 'We go on our " 'hands, so that we may eat flesh, and we crawl along " ' upon our hands, so that we may drink blood.' As " soon as I saw it, I prevented them from devouring, " and I cursed and bound them in the name of the " Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, saying, ' May "' you not proceed on your way, nor finish your " ' journey, and may God break your teeth, and cut " ' the veins of your neck, and the sinews thereof, that "'you approach not the sheep nor the oxen of the " 'person who carries [sc. these writs]! I bind you " ' in the name of Gabriel and Michael. I bind you " 'by that angel who judged the woman that combed " ' (the hair of) her head on the eve of Holy Sunday. "' May they vanish as smoke from before the wind "' for ever and ever, Amen!'" ${ }^{2}$

[^20][^21]As will be seen from the following excerpts from the Assyrian poems, the Seven Spirits altered but little as time went on :-
" They creep like a snake on their bellies,
" They make the chamber to stink like mice,
" They give tongue like a pack of hounds." ${ }^{1}$
" Over the highest wall and through the thickest wall,
" Like a stormflood they can pass,
" Breaking through from house to house ;
" No door can shut them out,
" No bolt can turn them back,
"For through the portal like a snake they creep,
"And through the hinges like the wind they blow." ${ }^{2}$
It is they who rush over a city on the storm clouds, bringing devastation in their train, and from them come all hurricanes and tempests. They unsettle everyone that they may meet, bringing unrest, disorder, and confusion into the world, and to them is due the restlessness and desire for wandering which come upon men.
" They scour from land to land,
" Driving the maid from her chamber,
" And the man from his home,
" And the son from his father's house.

[^22]" They hunt the doves from their cotes,
" And drive the bird from its nest,
" And chase the martin from its hole." ${ }^{1}$
The Syriac belief described above in their assailing the byres and stables was primitive Sumerian and not a late development.
" Through the gloomy street by night they roam,
" [Smiting] sheepfold and cattle-pen ;
" Shutting up the land [as with door and] bolt." ${ }^{2}$
" Rending in pieces on high, bringing destruction below,
"They are the Children of the Underworld.
" Loudly roaring above, gibbering below,
"They are the bitter venom of the gods.
" They are the great storms directed from Heaven,
" They are the owls which hoot over a city." ${ }^{3}$
They feed on mankind like vampires.
" Knowing no care, they grind the land like corn,
" Knowing no mercy, they rage against mankind,
" They spill their blood like rain
" Devouring their flesh and sucking their veins.
" They are demons full of violence
" Ceaselessly devouring blood." ${ }^{4}$

[^23]The power of spreading particular diseases was attributed to certain demons such as Ura, the plaguespirit, and Ashakku, the fever-spirit. There is a legend about Ura, the plague-spirit, which gives the vainglorious speech he made to Ishum :-
" Ura was angry, and determined
" To ravage the whole world,
" But Ishum, his counsellor, appeased him
" That he abandoned [his wrath]
" And thus spake the hero Ura :-
" ، Whosoever shall praise this song,
"' In his shrine may plenty abound
"' Whosoever shall magnify my name,
" ' May he rule the four quarters of the world ;
" ' Whosoever shall proclaim the glory of my valour
" ' Shall have none to oppose him ;
" ' The singer who chants it shall not die in pestilence,
" ' But unto king and noble his speech shall be wellpleasing;
" ' The scribe who learns it shall escape from the foe
" ' In the shrine of the peoples where he cries my name continually
" ' His understanding will I increase.
" ' In the house where this tablet is set,
" 'Tho' I, Ura, be angry or the Imina-bi gods bring havoc,
" ' Yet the dagger of pestilence shall not approach it,
" ' Immunity shall rest upon it.'" ${ }^{1}$

[^24]
(3) Charms and Magical Preparations.

As auxiliaries to the spells which he chanted, the magician would use various substances, animal, vegetable, or mineral, which had a ceremonial importance and were probably endued with magical power. In many instances these are of the same nature as amulets, and it is often easy to see how they have acquired their potency. Of these the simplest was pure water, which was sprinkled over the possessed person at the conclusion of an incantation, and this had a double meaning, symbolizing as it did the cleansing of the man from the spell and the presence of the great god Ea, whose emanation always remained in water and whose aid was invoked by these means. In order to drive out a Headache Demon, Marduk, according to the legend, came to Ea for advice, and he was told to take water at the confluence of two streams and sprinkle it over the man, performing as he did so certain ceremonies. ${ }^{1}$

Meteoric iron or aerolites ${ }^{2}$ seem to have been used as charms or amulets, and this is quite as intelligible as the use of water, since from the nature of them both they are obtained from the habitations of the gods. But when we come to tamarisks, reeds, and other plants, or flour, or hair from beasts, it is not so easy to see why such materials should have been

[^25]adopted for magical purposes. A branch of tamarisk or the date-spathe ${ }^{1}$ were held aloft in the hand during the exorcism which was to repel the attacks of demons and lay them under a ban, and this shows that they were possessed of magical power. Here we can see an idea similar to that of the use of water in magic, for just as water contains the power of the god Ea, so will any piece of tamarisk contain the emanation of the tree-spirit which lives in the sacred tamariskshrub. ${ }^{2}$ This use of branches in magic shows that the early inhabitants of Babylonia were in no wise different from other nations in believing that trees were inhabited by spirits or gods, and it is on this principle of giving a sentient or perhaps divine nature to inanimate objects that so many of the amulets can be explained. There is a curious confirmation of this use of branches in Babylonian magic on a bowl from Niffer, in the centre of which is the figure of a man, rudely drawn, holding up a branch of some tree in his hand. The rest of the bowl is inscribed with a Hebrew incantation to be recited. ${ }^{3}$

[^26]Certain birds possessed supernatural powers, notably the raven and the hawk :-
" A raven, the bird that helpeth the gods,
" In my right hand I hold;
" A hawk, to flutter in thine evil face,
" In my left hand I thrust forward."
Among the Semites the raven was always associated with the supernatural. It was one of the birds sent forth by Noah from the Ark. The Arabs consider it a bird of ill-omen which foretells death and disaster, ${ }^{2}$ and it is unlawful food according to the Moslem law. ${ }^{3}$ In the Syriac History of the Blessed Virgin Mary ${ }^{4}$ a certain young man is possessed by devils, but they are driven forth by exorcism and take the form of ravens; and in Thomas of Marga the same belief is testified to. ${ }^{5}$

One of the stories of Bar-Hebræus relates how in a certain village "a troop of devils appeared in the " form of men, and they said to the villagers, ' Behold, " 'a camel hath strayed away from us : give us a man "' that he may search for him.' And when they " brought out a man to them to look for the camel, " he saw ravens flying about, and he made his escape,

[^27]" and went into the village and said, 'In very truth, " 'these are devils and not men; furthermore, they "' have lost no camel.' " ${ }^{1}$

Devils assailed Rabban-bar-'idta in the form of "black stinking ravens" which flew up and tried to force themselves into his cell to destroy him, but were driven back to the sorcerer who sent them, by reason of his night-long prayers. ${ }^{2}$

The hawk is another of the magic birds of the East. It was the emblem of Horus in Egypt, ${ }^{8}$ which at once shows in how great a respect it was held. In the Syriac stories of Alexander, Nectanebus sends a drug to Philip of Macedon by means of an enchanted hawk, and it showed him a dream. ${ }^{4}$

On the other hand, the owl was a bird of ill-omen among the Assyrians, as it is among the more modern Semites. Dr. Budge informs me that in many villages in the Soudan this same view is held of the bíma or owl. If an owl hooted over an Assyrian city it was supposed to be the work of the Seven Devils. ${ }^{5}$ The Arabs of the present day consider the owl to be the wraith of a woman seeking her child. ${ }^{6}$ In Syria "an owl heard hooting by a sick man is an omen of his death."7

[^28]It is regarded by the Malagasy as a bird of ill-omen, and is called by them the "spirit bird," for they think it to be an embodiment of spirits, and its hoot in the night is a presage of evil. ${ }^{1}$ All three birds were unclean to the Hebrews, according to the Levitical law. ${ }^{2}$ Aelian also bears witness to these traditions by saying that it is considered by men to be a bird that presages evil. ${ }^{3}$

Animals and their hair were largely used in ceremonies, and great stress was laid on the beasts being virgin. A young pig, a virgin kid, or its hair are frequently mentioned, and this condition of ceremonial cleanness was imposed on the use of such beasts even down to the Middle Ages. The "virgin kid" was largely used by the wizards of a few hundred years ago in making parchment to be inscribed with magical spells. ${ }^{4}$

In order to prevent the entrance of demons into the house the Assyrians hung up various plants near the door.
" The Fleabane (?) on the lintel of the door I have hung,
"St. John's wort (?), caper (?), and wheatears on the latch I have hung,
"With a halter as a roving ass thy body I restrain." ${ }^{5}$

[^29]This custom has survived among the Jews of the present day, who hang aloes or cacti from the arch of the doorway as amulets. ${ }^{1}$

Spittle had great power in Babylonian sorcery, particularly in bewitching men or casting spells upon them. In the Third Tablet of the series "Evil Spirits," the priest claims that Ea has added his spittle to his, and although what it refers to is not quite clear, it is evident that considerable importance is attached to it. ${ }^{2}$ Presumably the spittle took some part in the ceremonial, just as it was used in Palestine a few centuries later. In the New Testament it is said of Christ that He "spat on the ground, and made clay of the spittle, and He anointed the eyes of the blind man with the clay." ${ }^{3}$

(4) Traditional Forms of Exorcisms.

The Sumerians were very fond of repeating in their magical prescriptions long traditional stories of the gods, their doings, and how they were the first to discover the beneficent properties of the charms which were in daily use. Such a story is found in the text which begins "In Eridu groweth the dark kiškanu," which is worth giving in full here, because of certain interpretations which have been suggested for it :-

[^30]" In Eridu groweth the dark kiškanû
" That springeth forth in a place undefiled,
" Whereof the brilliance is shining lapis
" Which reacheth unto Ocean ;
"From Ea its way in Eridu
" Is bountiful in luxuriance,
" Where earth is, there is its place,
" And the Couch of the Goddess Id its home.
" In an undefiled dwelling like a forest grove
" Its shade spreadeth abroad, and none may enter in.
" In its depths (are) Shamash and Tammuz.
" At the confluence of two streams
"The gods Ka-Hegal, Shi-Dugal, (and) of Eridu
" [Have gathered] this kiškanû, [and over the man]
" Have performed the Incantation of the Deep,
" (And) at the head of the wanderer have set (it).
" That a kindly Guardian, a kindly Spirit
" May stand at the side of the man, the son of his god.
" The . . . which seizeth on the hand
" Of him whose face hath not been turned towards it
" [From where] he lieth, may it retard its foot.
" May an evil . . . stand aside therefrom,
" May . . . from the mouth of the king restrain it on the way.
" May Ishtar, [the Lady] mighty, wise, and pure,
" From the dwelling-place cut it off."
The explanation of this text which has hitherto found credence among certain Assyriologists is that it contains nothing less than a reference to the Garden of Eden as it was known to the Babylonians. This view was originated by Professor Sayce in his Hibbert Lectures (1887, p. 237), who draws a comparison between this and the Biblical descriptions, and this is still maintained by him and Mr. Pinches in their respective books, The Religions of Ancient Egypt and Babylonia (Gifford Lectures, 1902, p. 385) and The Old Testament in the light of the Historical Records of Assyria and Babylonia (1902, p. 71). As it is an important point to consider, it will be as well to examine the evidence in detail ; but first it must be remarked that since the last publication of this text considerable additions have been made to it, as has been mentioned in the preface. Mr. Pinches bases his translation on that of Professor Sayce's rendering in 1887 :- ${ }^{1}$

[^31]" Incantation: '(In) Êridu a dark vine grew, it was made in a glorious place,
"' Its appearance (as) lapis-lazuli, planted beside the Abyss,
" ' Which is Ae's path, filling Êridu with fertility.
"، Its seat is the (central) point of the earth,
" ' Its dwelling is the couch of Nammu.
" ' To the glorious house, which is like a forest, its shadow extends,
" ' No man enters its midst.
" ' In its interior is the Sun-god, and the peerless mother of Tammuz.
" ' Between the mouths of the rivers (which are) on both sides.' "
" Here the text breaks off, and where it again " becomes legible, the phrases are those of an ordinary " incantation, whose connecting link with the above "poetical lines is lost." Mr. Pinches draws the following conclusions from this text :-(a) That Eridu "was, to the Babylonians, as a garden of Eden, " wherein grew a glorious tree, to all appearance " a vine, for the adjective 'dark' may very reasonably " be regarded as referring to its fruit. Strange must " have been its appearance, for it is described as " resembling 'white lapis-lazuli,' that is, the beautiful " stone of that kind mottled blue and white." (b) "The " probability that it was conceived by the Babylonians " as a garden is strengthened by the fact that the " god Aê, and his path, i.e. the rivers, filled the place
" with fertility, and it was, moreover, the abode of the " river-god Nammu, whose streams, the Tigris and "Euphrates, flowed on both sides." (c) "There, too, "dwelt the Sun, making the garden fruitful with his " ever-vivifying beams, whilst 'the peerless mother " of Tammuz,' probably a name of Damkina, added, " by her fructifying showers, to the fertility that the " two great rivers brought down from the mountains "from which they flowed." (d) "To complete still " further the parallel with the Biblical Eden, it was " represented as a place to which access was forbidden, " for 'no man entered its midst,' as in the case of the " Garden of Eden after the fall."

But I very much doubt whether the words in the text will bear the interpretation which has been put upon them, or that the points of similarity are sufficiently marked to justify the comparison. First, as to the meaning of kiskanu, which is supposed to be the Tree of Life, and has been identified with the vine. The kiškan̂̂ is a plant or tree divided in the Assyrian syllabaries into three classes, ${ }^{1}$ piṣ̂u " white," salmi "dark," and sâmi "brown." Mr. Pinches, who translates sami "grey or blue," ${ }^{2}$ considers that these colours refer to the fruit of the tree, and brings forward in support of his theory that the vine is the only plant growing in the country with these [^32]three colours of fruit, and that the kiskanì is mentioned in the bilingual lists among plants of the vine species. But the colours may refer equally well to the flowers of the tree or plant, and no inference can be drawn from its position on the tablet on which the word occurs, for it is separated from the eight species of vine by two words, one of which is $i s ̣-s ̣ i ~ s ̣ a l-m i ~(" b l a c k ~$ wood "). Indeed, if any inference at all is to be drawn from its connection on this tablet (W.A.I., ii, No. 4) it is distinctly improbable that kiškan̂ means a vine, since each of the eight species mentioned is marked in Sumerian with a special sign for "vine," and the Sumerian for kiškanî has no such specification attached.

It is, however, unnecessary to imagine a mythological meaning for kiškanû. The text in question is for a sick man, and the kiskkan $\hat{u}$ is to afford the remedy for his disease. We have seen that it is a vegetable, plant or shrub, identified by the three colours white, and probably blue and brown, which grows thickly like a grove by the river-side near Eridu in Southern Babylonia, and it now remains to identify this shrub. Mr. H. H. W. Pearson, of the Royal Gardens at Kew, informs me that the description coincides with that of the Astragalus, of which there are many varieties. From the Astragalus gummifer ${ }^{1}$ is obtained

[^33]Tragacanth, which possesses emollient and demulcent properties, and it was used by the Greek physicians as far back as the fourth or fifth centuries, to allay cough and hoarseness and to promote expectoration. ${ }^{1}$ It is still to be obtained in the bazaars of Bagdad, whither it comes from Persia. ${ }^{2}$ It seems, therefore, very probable that the kiskkan $\hat{u}$ is one of the varieties of astragalus from which Tragacanth is procured.

Again, ana apsi tarṣu (1. 2) cannot mean "planted beside the Abyss," but is more probably "stretcheth out unto the Ocean Deep," i.e., the water. The fourth line has been given a remarkable meaning by the totally unwarranted insertion which Professor Sayce was the first to make, of the word "(central)," the whole line thus running, "Its seat is the (central) point of the earth," or, in Professor Sayce's later translation, "His seat (there) is the centre of the earth." But the line is nothing more than "its seat is the earth," i.e., its roots go deep into the earth, and it has nothing

[^34]whatever to do with the $\dot{\partial} \mu \phi a \lambda \grave{o} s \gamma \hat{\eta} s$, as Professor Sayce originally suggested (Hibbert Lectures, p. 238). Further, there are no grounds for Mr. Pinches' translation "the peerless mother of Tammuz," in the line "In its midst are Shamash and Tammuz."

Mr. Pinches' arguments may thus be met one by one :-
(a) That Eridu was as a Garden of Eden there is absolutely no reason to believe. There is no reference at all to any garden in the text, and the natural interpretation is the one to follow, namely, that the kiškanû grew wild.
(b) The presence of a river does not presuppose the presence of a garden, as Mr. Pinches would have us believe. Besides, the rivers which are mentioned have nothing to do with the River with Four Heads of Genesis, but have a purely ceremonial meaning, of which the explanation is this. The gods plucked the plant near to where two streams ran into one another, this being always a place with a magical significance. For instance, the magician is elsewhere directed to "take water at the confluence of two streams, and with this water perform a purifying incantation," ${ }^{1}$ or, again, he is to "take an earthen vessel which hath come from a great kiln, and at the confluence of two streams to bale up (?) water." ${ }^{2}$

[^35]Inasmuch as the locality is the same in all three instances, and the texts are all of the same class, it follows that if the first are the Rivers of Eden, so also must be the second and third, which is obviously absurd. In the two last cases it is clear that a place attainable by mortals is intended, and so also is it in the Eridu text. The magician is intended to imitate the gods and pluck the kiškani from an earthly spot in order to heal his patient therewith, just as the gods, whose example he follows, did in times long past.
(c) The mention of the presence of the Sun-god and Tammuz " in its midst" does not by any means imply the existence of a divine garden for their habitation. Three explanations of this line are possible, first, that it has an entirely mythological reference, in which case the gods mentioned are some form of tree-spirit. If this be the case, there is still no proof that the kiskan $\hat{u}$ was the Tree of Knowledge, since the belief in treespirits is general in early communities, and it would be straining the whole idea to narrow one ill-defined and vague instance down to such a very special case as the Biblical tree. Secondly, if the explanation be purely physical, and is merely the description of the ordinary characteristics of the plant wrapped up in theological language, implying that it thrives in the Sun, just as its path is that of Ea, that is, that it lives near water, still less can it be referred to the Tree in Genesis. Probably, however, the explanation is a twofold combination of the above, pointing to its divine connection by reason of its peculiar habitat and position. The case with all magical plants used as charms in these incantations is the same, that they should have some divine association and connection whence their power should emanate. ${ }^{1}$
(d) The last point, "that no man enters its midst," is the one point of similarity which this text bears with the Biblical Eden. It has been shown above that there is no mention whatever of a garden and no reason to suppose that any is referred to ; that the kiškanû is certainly not a vine, being probably nothing more than a flowering and perhaps thorny shrub, and that its association with the gods is similar to other plants used in incantations, since it is merely intended to explain the origin of its power in magic. So that the last point mentioned above is the only remaining support for the Eden-theory. Now, it is obvious that the phrase cannot refer to Eridu, since this was a city of human habitation, and therefore it can only refer to the kiskan $\hat{u}$, which "grows like a forest" or "grove," as the text itself says, and herein lies the interpretation. Either by reason of its thick growth or from its thorny character, or both, it is difficult to force a passage through, and no man can push his way into the depths of its thickets except with extreme trouble.

[^36]In all this text there is no mention of any of the following characteristics of the Biblical Garden of Eden: the planting of a garden by a god, the existence of every tree therein, the tree of life, the tree of knowledge of good and evil or its fruit, the four-headed river, the presence of the serpent, and the Cherubim and the flaming sword.

The real explanation of the text is perfectly simple without straining after Biblical comparisons. The kiškanû-plant, according to tradition, grew in Eridu when the gods were nearer to mankind than in after days, and it was they who originally plucked it for medicinal use from the place where it grew where two streams met, and performed with it certain ceremonies. Their actions stamped the prescription as infallible, and sanctioned the repetition of the ceremonies in later days, so that any more modern magician or priest, in treating his patient, might have a divine model to imitate. This is all that is meant, and there is absolutely no reference to any Garden of Eden.

As another instance of the fondness of the Babylonians for going back to the most primitive periods for their models in such matters, I may cite the Legend of the Worm, ${ }^{1}$ which has been hitherto unknown :-
" After Anu [had created the Heavens],
" The Heavens created [the Earth],

[^37]> " The Earth created the Rivers,
> " The Rivers created the Canals,
> " The Canals created the Marshes,
> " The Marshes created the Worm.
> " Came the Worm and wept before Shamash,
> " Before Ea came her tears :-
> " ' What wilt thou give me for my food,
> " ' What wilt thou give me to devour ?'
> " ' I will give thee dried bones,
> " ' And scented . . . -wood.'
> " ' Nay, what these dried bones of thine to me,
> " ' And thy scented . . . -wood ?
> " ' Let me drink among the teeth,
> " ' And set me on the gums ;
> " ' That I may devour the blood of the teeth,
> " 'And of their gums destroy their strength
> " ' Then shall I hold the bolt of the door.' " 1

The incantation is really one which was written for people with toothache, which was believed to be due to the gnawing of small worms. By repeating the story of the creation and subsequent action of the original Worm, the magician shows that he clearly has knowledge of the name of his enemy and his methods, always a fundamental principle in magic, and he may then proceed with his instructions :
"So must thou say this : O Worm!
" May Ea smite thee with the might of his fist!"
${ }^{1}$ Compare Ecclesiastes, xii, 4.
and after chanting the incantation three times, he must rub a mixture of beer, a certain plant probably of a pungent nature, and oil on the tooth of his patient.

From the facts stated in the above pages, the reader will be able to glean an idea of the scope and contents of one group of Sumerian magical texts, and it is hoped that the information therein given will induce the student of comparative folklore to investigate this important subject. It will, of course, be understood that the exact meanings of certain words are still obscure, but with the publication of new texts and further study, there is every reason for believing that we may shortly attain to a tolerably accurate knowledge of the ceremonies, enchantments, and spells which the Sumerian sorcerer employed in dealing with credulous clients some six thousand years ago.

${ }^{\text {a }}$ Gullutia. From W.A.I., iv, 26 (4), 46, tam-tum ši-i gal-ta-at ("the sea heaves"), galâtu has evidently the meaning of "quaking" (whence its more common meaning of "quaking with fear"), but here the translation " when I have shaken the sick man" is unlikely. It is more probable that just as the magician reduces the strength of the sick man (cf. the following line), and thereby that of the devil in him, so will he frighten into subjection the evil power which has possessed the body of the patient.
${ }^{\text {b }}$ Restore the first characters, SUR-AŠ, and compare pl. 31, 1. 102, which should read SUR-AŠ-ŠUB A-HAA-AN-TUM U-ŠU-UŠ-ŠUB, etc. In Devils and Evil Spirits, vol. ii, Tablet "O," 11. 11-12, SUR-AŠ-ŠUB is translated $t i i^{\prime}-u$ šu-ru-ub-bu-[u]. The meaning of A-HAA-AN-TUM is doubtful ; A-HA-AN = nušŭu (Brünnow, List No. 11,704). U-ŠU-ŠUb is probably to be translated ḩarbašu; see pl. 46, 11. 168-169, where har-ba-s $u$ is certainly to be restored as the translation of U-šu-[ŠUB].

a Ušalli [šu ?]; šalâšu= "to do something three times," probably for reciting incantations. Cf. the Legend of the Worm (vol. ii), r. 26, sipti III-šu ana eli tamannu(nu). The first half of the line refers to libations as offerings.
b Lamittum ; lamâdu=" to learn," probably here with an ulterior meaning, like the Hebrew yada', " to know."
c Muštenn $\hat{u}=$ "one that changes the condition of." From the parallel passage in the previous line it evidently has the meaning of " marrying," and possibly affords a clue to the interpretation of the Hebrew šânâ in Esther ii, 9.

(Brockelmann, Lexicon, p. 163, a), "arch," so that "Arch of the GIŠ-ŠA-KA-NA" clearly points to the meaning "door" for the latter word (i.e., the actual door as the Sumerian "wood : middle : door" shows, and not merely the whole doorway, gateposts and all). This is still further borne out by the present passage "I put bitumen on the door beneath," in order that Ea (the god of the water supposed to be spilt on the floor) may remain within the house, and not drain away over the threshold into the street.

a Kiskanû. From the description of the kiškanu şalmu in these lines it may be inferred that it grew wild (it "springeth forth in a place undefiled "), it was of thick or dense growth ("bountiful in luxuriance," "like a forest grove"), its locality was the river bank ("where earth is, there is its place, and the Couch of the Goddess Id (the River Goddess) its home"). It occurs in the grammatical lists
" May Ishum, the great overseer,
"The potent sprite of the Gods,
180. "Stand at his head and guard him through the night.
" Unto the kindly hands of Shamash
"Night and day may he commend him."
Exorcism, incantation.
Incantation :-
In Eridu groweth the dark kiškanu ${ }^{\text {a }}$ That springeth forth in a place undefiled,
185. Whereof the brilliance is shining lapis Which reacheth unto Ocean ; From Ea its way in Eridu Is bountiful in luxuriance,
(W.A.I., ii, 45, 4, $1.5^{2} \mathrm{ff}$.), where three kinds are mentioned, piṣ̂ (" white "), ṣalmi (" dark "), and sâmi (" brown" ?), and a few lines below several kinds of vine are explained. The determinative in Sumerian is GIŠ, "wood," and not U, " plant," or SAR (postpositive), and it does not occur in the plant lists still extant (see Cun. Texts, part xiv), or in the list of vegetables, etc., in Merodach Baladan's Garden (ibid., pl. 50) ; and since three varieties are known (white, blue (?), and brown), kiskan $\hat{u}$ must therefore be the name of several species of tree or shrub bearing different coloured flowers, berries, or fruit. From the first line of this incantation we know that it grew in Eridu (i.e. Southern Babylonia). Everything points to its being a real shrub or tree and not a mythical one, and Mr. H. H. W. Pearson, of the Royal Gardens at Kew, has kindly suggested to me that the astragalus, of which there are more than thirty varieties (v. also Mr. Pearson's article on Palestinian Flora in Encyclopædia Biblica, under Palestine), agrees with the description given above. On the possibility of its being one of the tragacanthbearing varieties, and the various explanations of this text, see Introduction.

[^0]:    ${ }^{1}$ The original meaning of ILU, like the Hebrew unknown. The Sumerians indicated the word "god" by a star (类), and we are therefore justified in assuming that the Sumerians believed that their gods inhabited the sky.
    ${ }^{2}$ The form ekimmu is distinctly against the view that it means "the snatcher," which would probably be ikkimu.

[^31]:    ${ }^{1}$ Professor Sayce's latest translation (Gifford Lectures, 1902, p. 386) differs somewhat from that in the Hibbert Lectures:-
    " In Eridu a vine grew overshadowing; in a holy place was it brought forth ;
    " its root was of bright lapis, set in the world beneath.
    " The path of Ea was in Eridu, teeming with fertility.
    " His seat (there) is the centre of the earth;
    " his couch is the bed of the primeval mother.
    " Into the heart of its holy house, which spreads its shade like a forest, hath no man entered.
    " In its midst is Tammuz,
    " between the mouths of the rivers on both sides."
    Professor Sayce considers that Hommel may be right in translating kiškan̂̂ " palm" instead of "vine."

Similarly, in the sixth tablet of the series Shurpu (W.A.I., iv, 7, i, 16-32), where the lines are also written out, Marduk quotes the first line of the tablet. Unfortunately, here it cannot be supplied.

    a $\operatorname{Naru(k)ka}$; evidently an article of leather for binding or girdling (cf. Brünnow, List, No. 244). Possibly it is connected with the Syriac 'erketha, a girdle (Brockelmann, p. 262, a).

    ${ }^{\text {a }}$ Literally " fox of the city."
    ${ }^{\text {b }}$ Idul: dâlu is a synonym for alâku, W.A.I., ii, 35, 53, and the corresponding root in Syriac is dâl, se movit, tremuit. Apparently dâlu has the idea of moving furtively, and if so, possibly the word ${ }^{\text {am }}$ daialu means a "scout." See A.J.S.L., xvii, 3, April, 1901, p. 163 , note, and cf. 1. 67, mudalla.
    c Sakummiš: from a comparison of the Fifth Tablet, col. v, 1. 15 ("They stand in the highway to befoul the path"), with 1.22 ("Ishum, overseer of suḳi šakummi"), šakummu has evidently the meaning "foul" or "muddy." Cf. W.A.I., iv, 20, 1. 4, lib âli ahat âli ṣîru bamâti šakummatu ušamlima ušalika namuiš, "The middle of the city, the side of the city, the plain, the high places I filled with mud and turned to ruins."

    a Pursit, from parâsu, "to separate."
    ${ }^{\text {b }}$ Presumably this refers to certain demons whose names are unknown on earth, and the magician here addresses them with the inclusive term "their name," i.e., whatever their name may be.

[^70]:    ${ }^{\text {a }}$ IM-DARA (W.A.I., v, 27, 13, e, which is probably to be restored this way) $=[h] a-a-p u$, with which we may compare the Syriac hâph (Brockelmann, Lexicon, p. 106, b), lavit. It seems possible that the scribe has here added the word mê, "water," but the text is so mutilated that no restorations are trustworthy. The explanatory text K. 246 (Haupt, Akkad. u. Sum. Keils., pp. 92-93, Il. 14 ff.) has : MULU-GIŠGAL-LU-BI KU-SUR-RA U-U-ME-NI-HAR KU-SUR-RA-A IM-bABBAR-RA KA-bAR-RA ID-ZI-DA ID-KAB-BU U-bA (?) . . HAR, which is translated $a-m e-l u s^{s} u-a-t u$ [ku-sur-ra-a e.sir-ma] ku-sur-ra-a ša . . . [ga]s-si bâba ka-ma-a [im]-na u šu-me-la . . .
    ${ }^{\mathrm{b}}$ First person in the text.

[^71]:    Prayer against the Evil Spirits.

[^72]:    a Or "Street of the East" and "Street of the West."
    ${ }^{\text {b }}$ IGI-IGI $=$ harranu; possibly here we may restore "O wayfarer."

[^73]:    a The ending of the reverse of Tablet " H " is the same as that of the Fifth Tablet, p. 8o, but unless the text of the obverse fills the hiatus of $11.47-55$, which does not, as far as can be judged at present, seem probable, Tablet " H " must be regarded as part of a separate Tablet.
    b This line and the similar lines in Tablet "C" (156 and 173) have been translated thus in preference to "The evil Spirit (is) the Fever of the desert," for the reason that the verb talput in Tablet "C," $1 .{ }_{174}$, is in the second person.
